We conducted a retrospective mortality study in a cohort of individuals exposed to vinyl chloride in Poland. Our cohort consisted of 916 workers employed in two vinyl chloride plants at six time periods between the years of 1946 and 1993, and who were followed up from January 1, 1948, to December 31, 1995. We compared mortality risks with that of the general Polish population and among both exposed and unexposed workers in this cohort. No differences were found in the mortality risks among the exposed workers and unexposed Polish workers. However, the mortality risks for the group of workers from the first time period (1946-1949) were statistically significant (P = 0.04). We did not find any significant increase in mortality risk related to the first time period of exposure or to a cumulative dose of
