Update April 18: Caplin, a recent film school graduate, was found and rescued on Wednesday. [UPDATE: Caplin was found after midnight and was in good condition. He is in stable condition in a local hospital.] For the past two weeks, Brandon Caplin has been missing from his hometown of Portales, New Mexico. His family believes he is being held by a drug cartel and are asking for help. On Wednesday, his father was spotted riding his motorcycle in the northern part of town. The next day, members of the family saw Caplin's wheelchair being moved. Caplin was last seen in town April 7. On April 10, his family went to the police station to file a missing person report. But the police didn't think Caplin was in immediate danger, said Caplin's father, Mark. That is when the family decided to publicize the case. On Thursday, the Portales police got an anonymous tip that led them to a parking lot at a Walmart near Interstate 25. They found a wheelchair outside the store, but it had been moved. Officers then went inside the store and looked for the man in the wheelchair. They found Caplin's passport, but he was nowhere to be found. Caplin is missing the top half of his body. His family believes he was held captive by the drug cartel. Caplin's father says the family hasn't given
